We bought more and a finer line of Suits this Spring than ever before, and have experienced the most unpropitious weather to sell them that we have ever had. Want to sell them while you can still

GRUB STREET, LONDON.

Up to the seventeenth century Grub street was on the outskirts of London. It was a street tenanted by bowyers, fletchers, makers of bowstrings and everything else that appertained to archery. Later on John Fox lived in Grub street, though he did not write his famous "Book of Martyrs" there. Fox's residence in Grub street occurred about 1572. John Speed, the tailor and cartographer, was a resident of Grub street, where he was famous as the most responsible parent, having a family of twelve sons and six daughters. Grub street of old and Milton street today is noted for its great number of alleys and courts.

From Grub street issued such famous old literary skits as "Jack the Giant Killer," "Tom Hickathrift," "The Wise Men of Gotham" and scores of others now a part of every boy's library. Probably literary men first began to populate Grub street in any numbers during Cromwell's time. Then a great number of seditious and libelous pamphlets were circulated, and as the authors for safety had to seek obscure living places they found a fitting retreat in the maze of alleys which webbed the Grub street section. At any rate, by the commencement of the eighteenth century Grub street had become quite notorious as the poor authors' quarter of London.

Man and His Chin.

In man the front of the lower jawbone possesses a well marked projection, known as the chin or mental prominence, covered by a fleshy pad of corresponding shape. In all other backboned animals the jawbone slopes back without any such protuberance. It is a singular fact that the presence of a well marked chin is associated with fine character and well marked intellectual qualities. This is one of the best founded rules in character delineation by physiognomy. The late Professor Huxley used to illustrate the matter by drawing a profile with good chin on the blackboard and then wiping out the chin and replacing it by a receding curve. Any one who repeats the experiment will be surprised at the result. The reason is not clear, but we may perhaps say that a well developed jaw is associated with good digestive powers, which have more to do with character than one might at first sight suppose.

Antiquity of Grains.

Nearly all the grains now in use are of unknown antiquity. Wheat was cultivated in all latitudes as far back in the past as we have authentic knowledge. Barley is thought to have originated in the Caucasus, but it was known and used everywhere in the most ancient times. Oats, like rye, were unknown in ancient India and Egypt and among the Hebrews. The Greeks and Romans received it from the north of Europe. Had there been an early civilization on this continent the wild oats found here and there would probably have developed into the useful cereal now considered absolutely essential to the proper nourishment of horses. This continent is credited with having given Indian corn to the old world, but this useful cereal was doubtless known in India and China many hundred years before the discovery of America.

A Dog Story.

An elderly clergyman living some few miles from a market town and somewhat absentminded withal was in the habit of driving there weekly, where he put up his horse at a particular inn, his dog always in attendance. One day when returning with a friend he was much annoyed to discover that the dog was missing and insisted on driving back to find him. The inn was searched, and there, sure enough, was the dog, and not only the dog, but the person's horse as well. The hostler had put another horse into the vehicle, but the dog, recognizing the mistake, elected to stay with his animal friend rather than return with his master. "Letter of a Dog Lover."

She Remembered.

"Rev. Mr. Stern's remarks over poor John were so sympathetic, I thought," said the widow's friend. "Sympathetic!" replied the Widow Graybeak. "He said John 'had gone to join the great majority.'"

The Others.

Don't live for yourself and do not be afraid of diminishing your own happiness by promoting that of others. He who labors wholly for the benefit of others and, as it were, forgets himself is far happier than the man who makes himself the sole object of all his affections and exertions.

Feminine View of It.

Mrs. Wederly—So you have never met the woman you thought you could marry? Singleton—Never. Mrs. Wederly—Well, I don't wonder at that. As a rule, women are hard to please.—Chicago News.

Too Bad.

Wife—So they returned your manuscript? It is too bad. Husband (who thinks he can write)—Yes; that is what the editor said about it.

Settled the Matter.

Critic (looking at a picture of the impressionist school)—If that's high art, then I'm an idiot. Cynicus—Well, that is high art.

In this mechanical age the mechanical man may not reach the highest honors, but he is generally able to pay rent.—Saturday Evening Post.

HERD OF BUFFALO IN CANADA.

Thirty-Three of the Rare Animals Are Carefully Preserved at Winnipeg.

There are 33 buffaloes in the dominion herd at the Banff National park in Winnipeg. All are in splendid condition, says the Bangor Commercial. There are 14 full-grown bulls and the old patriarch is 30 years of age. He was the first animal to be owned by Lord Strathcona at Silver Heights, where all the animals now in confinement in the west came from.

This animal is of historic importance. Very soon he will be shot and then he will be mounted. He has been a might fighter and has retained the leadership of the herd throughout many years until two years ago when he met his Waterloo. Old as he was his immense bulk and strength enabled him to kill one antagonist and to nearly dispose of another. Had it not been that he broke his horn on a rock the issue would probably have been different.

The bull which now rules the herd is one imported from Silver Heights and which defeated all the other bulls one by one. A herd of such dimensions as that is a sight which, since the time when the buffalo roamed in countless herds over the prairies, has rarely greeted the eyes of a white man. The enterprise of the officials who have had the buffalo in charge for their efforts to preserve this tangible link of those days before the great west felt the taming hand of the white settler upon his mane is to be commended by all who feel an interest in the life which occupied our great solitudes before history began for us.

AGED WAR VETERANS.

Some European Soldiers Who Have Lived to Upwards of a Century.

It is not always true that war shortens life. The sole survivor of the Greek war of independence, who was brought to the notice of King George the other day, is said to be 105 years old, and the last survivor of our wars have often reached a much greater age, says the London Chronicle. Sir Joseph Fayer, one of the king's physicians, has spoken to a man who fought in the battle of Buxar, which took place in 1764. William Gillespie, who saved the colors at Preston Pans, and is on the roll of Chelsea pensioners, died in Dumfries at 102, and the last survivor of the capture of Gibraltar lived to be 115. Thomas Wimmis, who died in 1791, near Tuam, in Ireland, had fought in the battle of Londonderry in 1701, and Phoebe Hessel, the Amazon, who received a bayonet wound at Fontenoy in 1745, lived to be 108, receiving a pension from the private purse of George IV. until her death. A veteran of Culloden drew a pension for 60 years, and died aged 106, and a man, whose horse was shot under him, at Edgell, in 1642, died, 94 years later, aged 113. There is now no survivor of Waterloo, but Mme. Givron, of Viesville, Hainault, saw the ground drenched with blood, and Napoleon riding "as if in a dream."

WINE IN POWDER FORM.

The French Have a New Method of Obtaining a Beverage in Concentrated Form.

The liquid part of wine contains light ethers, ethylic alcohol, heavy alcohol and oils, and substances such as furfural and aldehyde. All these products are poisonous. The solids of wine are coloring matter, fixed organic acids and mineral salts, all of which are harmless, with the exception of the lime being bad for the gouty, says the Philadelphia Record.

Now, a wine which is deprived of the heavy alcohol oils, lime and potash should contain no injurious elements. According to L'illustration, it seems that Dr. Garrigou, of Toulouse, has been able to obtain this result by concentrating a wine in a vacuum, this process taking away the cooked taste which ordinary heat produces. In this way wine may be reduced to a dry powder, and if then the powder be placed in water or ethylic alcohol all the properties of the wine are recovered, with the exception of the poisonous elements. By this process there is obtained a perfectly harmless wine, which may be kept indefinitely and which is handled readily.

A Monument to Cooks.

It is proposed to erect what is termed a monument commemorative of the culinary glories of France in the center of the great markets of Paris. A committee of city men, headed by a noted restaurateur, has been formed for this purpose. The memorial is to be a large fountain ornamented by medallions of celebrated gastronomic authorities—Cureau, who wrote on the culinary art; Brillat-Savarin, author of "La Physiologie du Gout," in which occurs the famous phrase, "L'homme d'esprit seul sait manger;" Grimod de la Reyniere and two other food experts of the past. Around the fountain there are to be sculptured figures of fishwives, oyster women, poultry and pig meat vendors, salad sellers and champion market porters, all "forts de la halle."

Now He Is Good.

An obedient husband up in Franklin county, Maine, was objecting to doing certain work about the house, and he quoted Scripture to his wife, showing that the household duties should properly be assigned to the woman. The good wife replied by reading to her astonished liege II Kings, xxi, 13: "I will wipe out Jerusalem as a man wipes a dish, wiping it and turning it upside down." That husband has wiped the dishes ever since.

PRACTICAL FARM GATE.

It Combines Strength and Durability
with the Further Advantage of Light Handling.

Good, durable, practical gates at entrances to fields, lanes and lots, are among the greatest conveniences on the farm. Do not put up weak makeshifts. Make them strong and solid and properly hung, so that it is a pleasure to open and shut them. Not long ago a neighbor lost a valuable cow by means of a poor gate. In her effort to reach green grass over the gate it broke down, and her leg was broken.
She had to be killed, and as she was only in fair milking condition, it was a total loss. If he had had a strong, substantial gate he would have been $50

A SOLID FARM GATE.

ahead, and that would have put up ten
good gates.

The gate photographed was made six or seven years ago, at the entrance to the barnyard. We combined two objects in this gate—strength and durability, and lightness to handle. We have deep staves and snowdrifts, and we hung the gate so that it could be raised up to pass over the snow. The gate is four feet long and four and a half feet high. For the gate pieces we used six-inch basswood, well seasoned.
The ends and center strips are three inches, made out of the same kind of wood. The first, third and fifth strips from the bottom we allowed to project out to hold the gate in place. In case logs are turned into the yard the bottom piece holds them from pushing and straining the gate. The hangers are of our own get-up and seem to answer the purpose in every respect. In making the hangers we use wagon tire two inches wide and about two and a half feet long. The iron was heated and bent in the shape of a rub iron on a wagon-box, only allowing two or more inches in the side turn to permit the gate to swing. The hangers are fastened to the post with four-inch wood screws. This gate has now been in use several years and is as sound as ever; we have another gate made of basswood that has been constructed over 15 years and is in use to-day. By all means build your gates of either pine or basswood.—Leo C. Reynolds, in Ohio Farmer.

Brief Description of an Ante-Bellum Festival in Virginia by a Preacher.

A Virginia preacher who had the good fortune to be born in the good old days writes to a local paper of the old-time wedding. He describes an old-fashioned wedding supper in this fashion, says the Nashville American.

"Let me tell you about it—that supper when Miss Nancy got married! The table was about 25 feet long; it stood in the hall of the 'big house,' which was about 40 by 60 feet. About the center of that table, in a large game dish, was a pig, cooked whole, with an apple in his mouth. Near each end of the table was a large turkey. Midway between the pig and the turkey were two large pound cakes, gaudily embossed with name 'Nancy' on one of them and 'Eli' on the other. Near the center and near each end of the table were stacks of butter 18 inches high, curled and frizzled in the most approved style. There were smaller cakes, fruits and confections in abundant. We did not know about boiled custard in our settlement and over on a side table was about three gallons of syllabub. They said that it would keep the cake from making us sick. Perhaps it did; at least I do not remember that any of us were sick when Miss Nancy got married."

SUICIDE IN SIBERIA.

When Once a Wish to Die Is Announced There Is No Such Thing
as Taking It Back.

I know of a case where a man, after a violent quarrel with his five sons, announced aloud his wish to die. The next morning he thought better of it and retracted his words; but—so I was informed, in all seriousness—the revengeful spirits shortly afterward inflicted the hoof disease on his herd, and took away three of his sons, one after another, says a writer in Harper's.

Usually, however, the man who has proclaimed his wish to die remains firm until the end. I met, in 1893, at the Anui fair in the Kolyma country, a man by the name of Katik, who said that he wanted to get rid of the troubles of this world.

He had no apparent illness, but his zeal for life had completely vanished,
and he intended to start for the land of his forefathers. He was as eager for death as if it meant for him a pleasant journey to a distant but very interesting country.

The vicinity of the Russian fort was no place for the fulfillment of his wish,
so he had to delay it for a couple of months; but when next I met Katik's wife, early in the fall, she was already a widow.

She told me the details of her husband's death in a very simple way. He was strangled with a lasso. She held his head in her lap, and two of his sons pulled the ends of the rope.

Katik's wife told me also that he was cheerful to the last, and even joked
the very moment his face was being covered with the hood of the death coat to prevent those present from seeing his last struggle.

OLD BEAUX ARE DELIGHTED.

One Woman Who Has Not Relegated
Their Virtues to the Musty Garret.

As a rule when a woman gets married she tries to pluck from her remembrance all thoughts of those who once paid court to her. Yet she can have a kindly feeling for them without in the slightest degree being untrue to the man who finally won her,
says the Chicago Chronicle.

"I love my old beaux," said the woman who is bound to be cheerful.
"They comfort me and make me forget unpleasantnesses. An old beau is very nice if he's at all presentable.
My husband says hateful things to the effect that I'm ruinously extravagant, always wanting things, and he intimates that only an angel of his magnitude could manage to get along with me at all. Not so my old beaux. They say he's the luckiest of men and intimate that they would have been better men had Providence been thus kind to them. Even the married ones aren't so bad. When their wives sue for divorce or their babies get the measles
they look volumes which seem to say that all would have been unrent had not an undeserving one borne off the prize. These unsolicited testimonials are as stimulating to me as old wine.
It isn't the slightest use to repeat them to my husband, however. He simply reminds me that women are so easy that they're tiresome and that those 'nincompoops' don't have to pay the bills."

BEAT HIS WIFE FOR HONOR.

Russian Soldier Deemed It His Duty
to Retain Insult at Her Hands.

A Prussian officer stationed at Strasbourg appeared before the court at Kolmar, in Saxony, and gave the following evidence in support of his demand to be divorced from his wife,
says a London paper:

"One night," he said, "I had a quarrel with my wife, in the course of which she exclaimed: 'You are too much of a coward to strike me!' What could I, as a Prussian officer, do when my wife accused me of cowardice? If the wife of another officer had thus insulted me, I could at least have challenged her husband to a duel, but I could not challenge myself, because my own wife insulted me."

"I got," continued the officer, "into a state of intense excitement over this terrible dilemma. I lit the candle and requested my wife formally three times to withdraw the insulting expression, which was incompatible with my dignity and honor as a Prussian officer. My wife sul-ked, and did not withdraw the insult. As it was my duty to enforce satisfaction for the insult I seized a stick and beat my wife."

The trial was adjourned.

Not George's Hatchet.

Carpenters who were repairing the Mary Washington house, opposite Fredericksburg, recently found in the ceiling a small hatchet of peculiar shape. They began to talk of the cherry tree and the small boy who could not tell a lie, and an old negro woman was found who remembered seeing George hide the hatchet after his famous achievement. But—and so the romance disappears from life—
Washington was a grown man before his mother bought the house. And the cherry tree hatchet is still un-found, although it is not unhonored or unsung.

Queer Cause of Strike.

More than a thousand Pennsylvania miners "struck" the other day to decide the question whether or not a bridle is part of a mule's harness. The trouble rose from the refusal of the stablemen to put on the bridles. Referees recommended that the mules be driven without bridles, and their suggestion was adopted. Then the men came back. The mules have passed a vote of thanks.

CAPTURED THE WRONG LION.

Compliment Intended for Noted Lecturer Falls to the Head Waiter.

The career of a social lion hunter is liable to be attended with an occasional disappointment, even though on the whole successful. Burton Holmes, on some of his tours as a lecturer, has been considerably lionized, and he tells this story of a compliment which he missed, but which was enjoyed by another, says the New York Times. He was lecturing in an eastern city, and a reception was given in his honor at the principal hotel of the place.

Among those who attended this reception was a woman prominent socially, who has established a sort of "salon," and received her friends Sunday afternoons, trying to provide a
"lion" or two for each occasion.

Burton Holmes was so fortunate as not to be presented to the fair lion hunter, but she presented herself to the man she had stalked for her game,
and urged upon him her invitation for the Sunday afternoon. He very modestly attempted to decline it. His excuses were not accepted, and the victim consented to appear. Extra arrangements were made for this occasion, and the fact that Mr. Holmes was to be there was heralded abroad. On the day all the youth and beauty of the place gathered together awaiting the advent of a somewhat tardy lion, who was received with every mark of consideration, and appeared to be embarrassed thereby. The head waiter had been mistaken for the eminent lecturer.

ENTERING THE CAPITOL.

Strangers Are Easily Distinguished
by the Way They Ascend
the Steps.

"When you see a man or woman climbing the steps to the west front of the capitol you may bet he or she is a stranger in Washington," said an old attache of the national capitol building, according to the Washington Star.

"Ninety-nine out of 100 persons who enter the capitol from the west are persons who are paying their first visit to the building; depend upon it. After they are here awhile they will make the pilgrimage by car and land themselves around on the east side, and thus escape climbing so many steps. Strangers invariably think the west side of the capitol is the front."

"At the last session of congress I noticed one day a man enter the corridor puffing and blowing and trying to catch his breath. When he cooled off sufficiently to talk coherently he gasped:
'Will you direct me to the house of representatives?'"

"I did so, and he passed on. The next day I saw him enter from the east side with a western congressman. The fellow was perfectly passive, and seemed pleased that he had found the easiest way of getting to the capitol. It was evident that the trip to the capitol had been made in a street car which landed him on the hill, and that the congressman had put him on."

PROTECTING THE BIRDS.

England Is Far Ahead of America in Preventing Ravages on the Songsters.

The protection of birds has been carried so far in England that fruit growers and farmers are complaining bitterly of the ravages of thrushes, blackbirds and bullfinches. These winged beauties work great mischief
in gardens and orchards, says the New York Tribune.

American readers of British books
recall with pleasure vivid descriptions of the diversion of shooting young rooks in the early spring with short-range, small-bore rifles, and of the suc-
cessfulness of the young rook pies cooked by experts. But it now appears that the English rooks have not been thinned out with sufficient thoroughness, and these birds do harm to various farm crops.

East of the Mississippi in most of the states north of the Potomac and the Ohio the protection of birds of every kind has been much underdone. We have no rooks or ravens here, but it is certain we don't protect our winged friends as we ought to protect them.

Where Richelieu Is Buried.

Although a stern edict has gone forth to no longer bottle up the new wine of science and letters in the old receptacle of Richelieu, even official iconoclasts have spared the familiar dome which covers the great cardinal's tomb. The new Sorbonne, however elaborate, would hardly be the Sorbonne at all without Richelieu's splendid chapel as its heart. Students and professors no longer have to bow before the altar, and no Sor-bonne doctors fill the pulpit, but who so chooses can enter and either find a service, or at least view the beautiful sarcophagus beneath which lies the dust of the great Armand
Jean du Plessis himself, in the midst of the institution he built anew, lavishing the millions of his private fortune thereon, and even mortgaging the estate of his heirs. Above the tomb has in recent years been suspended his carefully preserved
cardinal's hat, while the head itself, savagely severed when the tomb was violated in 1793, has also been miraculously recovered and replaced on the embalmed remains. Even the tomb itself was carted away and kept for many years at the museum.

The Court of Appeals Wednesday affirmed the judgment of the Fayette Circuit Court sentencing Claude O'Brien and Earl Whitney to be hanged for the murder of Merchant A. B. Chinn at Lexington. The murder was committed in October last, when Chinn surprised the men trying to rob his house. The Court says there was no error in the trial of the case in the court below. Governor Beckham will now fix the date of the execution.

Anna May Abbott.

The following neat compliment and voluntary endorsement was given by some of the leading citizens of Harriman, Tenn., to the "Little Georgia Magnet," when she appeared there last week. Miss Abbott will appear at the Grand, Monday night, and no one should miss her performance, as it is truly wonderful!

HARRIMAN, TENN., May 11.

MISS ANNIE MAY ABBOTT: We thank you for the privilege of acting upon your committee of investigation to-night. We are constrained as a simple act of justice to you as well as information to our friends to say that we carefully watched and put you through the most crucial and thorough tests that our intelligence and judgment could suggest and that every privilege and opportunity for investigation was afforded us.

We are pleased to vouch for you as being the most inexpressible and mysterious phenomenon we ever saw, presenting all the incredible feats advertised, and much more, and in a manner to preclude the possibility of trickery. We are sure we voice the sentiment of Harriman in saying: You give another exhibition in the temple to-morrow (Tuesday) evening, when we feel sure you will be a success in a full house, and appreciate and are. Certainly to witness one of your entertainments is a treat to be enjoyed but once in a lifetime, and we advise all our friends to see your performance.

We are, dear Madam, yours, etc., Signed by nineteen representative citizens of Harriman, Tenn.

The Street Carnival.

The big street fair has been in progress all of this week and will close tomorrow night. There has been a large attendance and the city has been crowded with visitors and everything presents a gala appearance.

On Tuesday, the Millersburg Military Institute with its crack drill corps, seventy-five strong, under the command of Major Best, gave an exhibition drill on the streets and were generously applauded.

On Wednesday, the Red Men's lodge, headed by the Maysville band, made a parade, which attracted a large crowd on the streets.

The Dana Thompson Carnival Company has a large collection of attractions, and the shows are all that is claimed for them. The high dive, made twice a day by Dana Thompson, from the top of a ladder 100 feet high, into a pool of water, is certainly a novelty and is a great feature of the exhibitions.

The very best of order has been maintained during the week, and few, if any, arrests were made. Considering the large crowd in town, this is remarkable, and speaks well for Paris.

The fire-works displays, which are given each evening, are about the only thing connected with the fair, that can be said to be a failure. It was expected that this feature would be quite interesting rather than a disappointment.

The following field day sports will take place on Main street at 10:30 o'clock Saturday morning:

Fifty yard dash, free for all.

Running board jump.

Standing board jump.

One hundred yard dash for boys under 15 years of age.

NEWS IN 1815 AND NOW.

The Battle of Waterloo Was Not Heard Of Till Six Weeks After It Was Fought.

Leopold de Rothschild, at a dinner of the Newspaper Press fund, drew an interesting contrast between the methods used for transmitting news in 1815 and now. His own firm claims to have been the first to announce the victory of Waterloo in England, says Country Life.

By the by, there is a tradition at Somersby, where Tennyson was born and lived, that they did not hear of the battle of Waterloo there till six weeks after it was fought.

Mr. Leopold de Rothschild, however, said that his grandfather, who was the owner of some ships, gave his captains direct orders that wherever they went they were always to bring him the latest newspapers, and in this way there came into his hands a Dutch paper which contained the intelligence in one line, "Great victory of the English at Amsterdam."

His grandfather took the news to Lord Liverpool, but was scouted because the intelligence had arrived on the previous day that the English troops had been beaten.

If there is a Waterloo fought in the future, we wonder how the first intelligence will reach London. Will it be by what we have come to regard as the somewhat prosaic cablegram? Will it be by telephone? Or shall we have it in a marconigram? Perhaps there may be an invention before then that will render all these obsolete.

EASILY UNDERSTOOD.

Movements of the Lips as Plainly Understandable to Deaf Mutes as Spoken Words to Hearers.

"You need not think you are always telephoning in secrecy," said a teacher in the deaf mute college in this city, relates the Washington Star, "when you go in a booth and close the double doors after you, as I see people doing every day. I notice these people in their retreats in which they think their words are drowned from the outer world, talking often while they look on the people outside of the glass doors."

"Now, do you know," he continued, "that every word that is so spoken is understood by a deaf mute whenever he sees what is going on under such conditions? That is a fact. The deaf mute becomes so proficient in learning to read the language of the lips that the motion is as expressive to him as the sound of the human voice to other people. The next time you have a secret to impart to some friend over a telephone in a public booth where people are watching you you should be careful to speak directly in the mouthpiece of the 'phone so that your secret be not given away to some who happen to understand the language of the lips."

MONTANA SOCIETY NOTE.

Characteristic Description of a Brilliant Social Function in the Cow Country.

The ball given at the Palace parlors over the Crimson Wing saloon last Friday night was a roaring success, reports the Alkali Gulch (Mont.) Herald. Pap Henderson tuned up the catguts and roared his bow about nine p. m., and started in on "Turkey in the Straw." Duck Lewis, Baldy Williams, Fightin' Pharaoh, and a few more punchers from the Double Cross ranch rode over, bringing their senioritas on their cayuses behind them. There was nothing special doing all night. About two a. m. Big Abe Hall, proprietor of the only respectable faro joint in Alkali Gulch, blew in and began to prospect for a partner. Abe had been taking too much bottled comfort and when he jerked Choctaw Kate away from Dan Weimer and backed off and "pulled," Big Abe, being some doped, fumbled his gun, and Dan's lead pill went lookin' for room in Abe's attic. The faro joint is now looking for a new manager.

The boys rounded up their ladies about four a. m. and vamoosed. It was one of the most brilliant heel-and-toe stampedes ever held in this settlement.

TELEGRAPH-POLE INDUSTRY.

Millions of Forest Trees Are Used to Support the Wires of the Various Lines.

Between Chicago and Denver, a distance of 1,500 miles, along one line of railway, there are 31,500 telegraph poles, says Arboriculture. They are set 170 feet apart, or 30 to a mile. As there are considerable more than 2,000,000 miles of steam railway in the United States, increasing in mileage each year, and many roads have double lines of poles to accommodate the great number of wires required to transact the telegraphic business of the country, there are 8,000,000 poles in use on railway lines.

When to this is added the poles used by trolley lines and by telegraph and telephone companies we find an aggregate of 15,000,000 poles in use. If these should be replaced at once it would require 250,000 flat cars to transport them; 8,000 locomotives would be necessary to haul the trains, which if continuous would reach 1,750 miles. If the poles were placed end to end they would reach more than three times around the earth at the equator.

Negroes in Penn State. Pennsylvania has a larger number of persons of negro descent in its population than any other of the northern states.

To Cure Rheumatism in Horses. The idea of curing rheumatism in horses by the means of brine baths is receiving the support of veterinary surgeons.

JOHN BROWN'S BODY.

Reposes in a Grave Near Lake Placid Among the Northern Adirondacks.

Half-way between the Mohawk river and the Canadian line, in Essex county, N. Y., shut in by a dozen towering peaks of the Adirondacks, are the living place and sleeping place of "Old John Brown." The living place is the home from which Brown went out to fight in Kansas, and the sleeping place is the grave beside a giant granite boulder—the grave in which they laid his body after the execution at Charleston, in 1859. Thirty-seven years after his death, when the horror of his anarchy had been forgotten, Kate Field and a dozen friends bought the old Brown farm, at North Elba, and turned it over to the state as a public charge. It is near Lake Placid and the other resorts of the northern Adirondacks, says the Four-Track News.

Frequently during the summer sojourners in want of amusement go over to the place and rest for a few minutes in the low-roofed, two-story house. Everyone knows the story of John Brown's repeated business failures, his visions, in which a "voice" told him to free the slaves, his part in the slavery war in Kansas, and the attack on the arsenal at Harper's Ferry. All these things the world has weighed, and it has given an honored place to him who was arch anarchist only 50 years ago.

BUILT SHIP IN THE WOODS.

Work Upon Which a Retired Sea Captain Has Been Engaged for Thirteen Years.

The Fourth of July will witness the launching at Quaker Neck wharf, Chester river, Kent county, of a Bay vessel which Capt. Jedson, a retired mariner, has been 13 years in building, and which stands in the woods a mile and a half. Some years ago Capt. Jedson arrived in Baltimore from a deep sea voyage. He decided to come ashore and go to farming, settling in Kent county. He is now 71 years old. He has built the craft all by himself, with the aid of an ax, reports the Baltimore American.

In the eighties he went into the woods near his home and began chopping out the keel and the timbers. The keel was laid in 1881. Then he stopped work, and the framework was allowed to fall to pieces. In a few years the old love of the sea rekindled Capt. Jedson's enthusiasm, and he started again to rebuild the vessel. He has worked on the vessel for 13 continuous years, and now has a craft 80 feet long and 11 1/2 feet beam. Her cabin ceiling is nine feet high, with a dining room measuring eight by ten feet. The vessel will be equipped with a 25-horse power engine and a 40-horse power boiler.

Capt. Jedson proposes to use a horse in dragging the vessel a mile and a half out of the woods to water. The entire time that he has spent on the craft has been 22 years.

GAVE PROVIDENCE CREDIT.

A Naval Chaplain Got an Appointment Despite the President's Opposition.

At a recent dinner in Washington, says a New York Mail and Express writer, Capt. —, of the United States navy, told the following story about a certain shallow-pated naval chaplain who was looked upon with scant respect by his brother officers. From traveling salesman the man had turned preacher, and backed by influence, came to Washington in Mr. Cleveland's time to get a naval chaplaincy. When he was introduced at the white house Mr. Cleveland looked over him in his grave, penetrating way and said: "Mr. —, this is no case for favoritism; we want a man of merit and ability for this post."

The applicant rejoined: "Mr. President, if it is God's will that I go into the navy, neither you nor any one else can keep me out."

The president eyed him for a moment and then said dryly:

"Well, Mr. —, I'll do my part, anyway. Good-morning."

"The cream of the joke is," said the narrator, "that the fellow—who really did get into the navy later—told the story himself with all seriousness, adding: 'And as I left the room I had a strong conviction that it was not the will of Providence that I should enter the navy at that time.'"

One on Kubelik.

Here is a story about Kubelik that did not come from the press agent: The violinist was once asked to play at a lunatic asylum. He chose a brilliant Slav composition, and the audience seemed delighted. One of the regular boarders came up and began to talk with him. Kubelik asked him how he liked the performance. The lunatic stared at him for awhile and then said: "Well, to think of the likes of you being allowed out while I am kept in here."

Putting It Mildly.

Here is the extremely delicate way which a Kansas states his chief reason for asking that he be freed from matrimonial bonds, which gall: "The defendant has acted in such a way that said husband has had difficulty in distinguishing her treatment of him as a husband from her treatment of others who bore no such relation to her."

Baseball Armor.

To protect his chest, a heart-shaped piece of sheet iron riveted to some heavy leather was worn by one of the players in a football match in Denver.

FREE TRIPS TO ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR.

ALL EXPENSES OF THE 120 MOST POPULAR SCHOOL TEACHERS IN THE STATE PAID.

School children and public generally invited to vote to determine the most popular teacher in every county. Votes ten cents each, ten cast at one time. All money over and above trip expenses of teachers to go into election of the Kentucky Building at the Exposition. Every voter thus given the satisfaction of knowing a worthy cause and important object have been aided, at the same time a favorite teacher has received recognition. Contest conducted under auspices of Educational Exhibit Committee of Kentucky Education Association, the organization formed to raise $50,000 for a Kentucky Building and full display of the State's products and resources at the Fair. The Legislature having failed to make an appropriation. Every educator in the State, whether teacher in public or private schools, or member of faculty of academy, college or university, medical, dental or theological institution, is eligible to election. Members of the Educational Exhibit Committee alone excepted.

Names of all school children voting to be enrolled in the Kentucky Building at the Exposition. Kentucky will have an educational exhibit occupying 2,000 square feet of space in the Palace of Education. The Exposition is to be the greatest international event in the world's history. The 120 teachers chosen will be lucky indeed in being tendered this trip to the Fair. Every county elects its own most popular educator. The county outside of Jefferson casting the largest number of votes will be allowed to send two teachers—the most popular and the second most popular.

THE VOTES WILL BE TEN CENTS EACH, TEN CONSTITUTING A BALLOT. At ten cents each every school child in the State will be able to cast at least one vote for his or her favorite teacher. But the voting will not be confined to school children.

PARENTS OF PUPILS OR ANY OF THEIR FRIENDS MAY VOTE. The purpose of the Association being to elect the most popular teacher in each county, as well as by the school children. Ballots contain ten spaces, so clubs of ten pupils may be arranged and each giving ten cents be credited with his or her vote. If one person desires to cast ten votes, it may be done by writing his or her name on one of the spaces and sending one dollar. It is not required that the name of the person voting be given at all. All the spaces for voters' names may be left blank. The Association wants, however, to enroll in the Kentucky Building at St. Louis next year the name of every child who cast one or more votes in the contest. Pupils are asked therefore to sign their names plainly to the ballots.

ALL EXPENSES OF THE TEACHERS WILL BE PAID BY THE ASSOCIATION. This will include railroad transportation from Louisville to St. Louis and return, board at one of the best hotels in the city for six days and admission to the exposition grounds for six days.

THREE PARTIES WILL BE MADE UP FROM THE MOST POPULAR TEACHERS to make the trip most profitable and more enjoyable. Each of these parties will consist of forty (40) teachers. This would make a total of 120 teachers, but as there are only 119 counties in Kentucky, the Association has decided to allow two teachers—the most popular and the second most popular—to go from that county—Jefferson excepted—which casts the greatest number of votes in the contest.

ALL TEACHERS IN THE STATE STAND ON AN EQUAL FOOTING in this contest. The teacher with only twenty pupils may receive more votes than the teacher with five or six times as many enrolled in his or her school, because the voting is not confined to children. The public will be an important factor.

Votes may be cast for any person who taught school during 1902 or is teaching now. This gives the teacher of a five months' school, which closed in November or December, the opportunity to be voted for during the vacation period.

ANY NUMBER OF BALLOTS MAY BE CAST AT ONE TIME. There is no limit. The more dollars sent in for any one teacher the more votes he or she will be credited with.

ONE DOLLAR CASTS TEN VOTES; TWO DOLLARS CASTS TWENTY VOTES; THREE DOLLARS CASTS THIRTY VOTES; FOUR DOLLARS CASTS FORTY VOTES; FIVE DOLLARS CASTS FIFTY VOTES; TEN DOLLARS CASTS A HUNDRED VOTES; ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS CASTS ONE THOUSAND VOTES.

All of the money received in this contest, over and above that used in defraying expenses of the 120 most popular teachers of the State on their trips to the World's Fair, will go for the erection of a Kentucky Building at the exposition; so every voter in this contest may have the additional satisfaction of knowing that he has aided a worthy cause.

THE STANDING OF THE CONTESTANTS WILL BE PRINTED FREQUENTLY in each county to show his or her friends how the race is being run. Begin voting now for your favorite school teacher. The votes will be counted under the supervision of the Educational Exhibit Committee (the Association). The personnel of this committee is as follows: Prof. J. O. Brownell, Louisville, Chairman; Prof. H. V. McChesney, Frankfort; Prof. R. P. Hallock, Louisville; Prof. W. H. Hurlbush, Louisville; Prof. P. Paul Anderson, Lexington; Dr. Chase Palmer, Danville; President William Dinwiddie, Jackson; Dr. W. G. Frost, Berea; Dr. B. D. Huntton, Louisville; Dr. E. Y. Mullins, Louisville; Dr. Arthur Yager, Georgetown; Superintendent M. A. Cassidy, Lexington; Superintendent J. C. Frogge, Frankfort; Prof. C. J. Crabbe, Ashland; Prof. McHenry Rhoads, Owensboro; Prof. T. S. Allen, Bellevue; Prof. C. C. Cherry, Bowling Green; Prof. Enos Spencer, Louisville; Miss Pattie S. Hill, Louisville; Mrs. Emily H. Bracken, Louisville; and Mrs. M. B. Tucker, Louisville. Members of the Educational Committee are not eligible to election in this contest.

REMEMBER EVERY COUNTY ELECTS ITS OWN FAVORITE TEACHER. Competition between counties only applies to the race for the 120 trip, the county outside of Jefferson, casting the largest total number of votes being granted the distinction of sending two teachers.

The result will be announced in every paper in the state, and, in addition to this, a congratulatory message will go to the teacher elected in each county. Later the details of the trip will be arranged, each teacher chosen being given the privilege of selecting the month—June, July or August, 1904—in which he or she wants to make the trip.

A LESSON IN LOVE.

BY GASTON HARVEY.

"Well, I suppose this is the end of it," John Carster heaved a deep sigh, and strode along moodily. Helen looked at him curiously, and then asked:

"The end of what?"

"You know as well as I do to what I refer. To be perfectly plain, I hear it reported on very good authority that you are to marry this Monte Cristo. And that is what I mean when I say that I suppose we will not take many more walks together." He looked at her keenly.

"I suppose it is but a further exemplification of the doctrine announced by the Bible, where it says: 'To him who hath, it shall be given, and to him who hath not, it shall be taken away.' And I want to add to that, even that which he may seem to have."

There was a silence for a few moments. Helen reached out and plucked at a forelock. She did not look at him. After a few moments she said in a low voice:

"You are getting bitter, John. Don't do it. It does not help you."

"Don't you think I have cause to be bitter? A man can smile and stand a great deal more without giving evidence of his suffering, and there is still another degree of pain, which turns everything to gall. I have suffered that."

"You are very wrong to look at things that way," replied the woman. "What have you to be bitter over? You possess youth, and health, and strength, and ability—all those are priceless gifts. You are well thought of by everyone, and I see no cause for you to think your lot is hard."

"Yes, what you say is true, but I have not the great essential—money. I might be a paralytic, and just have enough sense to get out of a lunatic asylum, and enough morals to keep from being looked up as a menace to society, but if I had money, all that would be overlooked, and I would be better thought of than I am now. As it is, I am not considered at all."

"Not considered by whom?"

"Everybody. And someone in particular whom I wish to consider me, and who has refused. I have tried everything else; I have placed myself at her feet. Love does not count."

Her face was crimson. She looked far away over the serene, brown fields, and at last said:

"Then what am I to deduce from that assertion—it isn't clear."

"You are not to deduce anything—I state it as my positive conviction that, given on the one hand a man with everything to make him desirable in the eyes of a woman, but with no money, and on the other hand a woman with nothing to recommend him but money, a woman will choose the man with the money 99 cases out of 100. That's what I mean."

"Why, John, why, John!" There was an infinity of reproach in those words.

"Yes, I mean it!" he added. "I mean every word of it. Women are essentially selfish, and they love the soft side of life. They know that money will make a soft side to anything, and therefore, they are on the side of money."

"I am sorry for you," she said, simply. "I thought that you had a higher idea of women."

"Haven't I a right to be bitter?" he continued. "Haven't I every right to such ideas? If it has not been demonstrated to me, nothing has. There is nothing so convincing as personal experience, and it is from that I speak."

"I have known you a long time, John, and I know of no such instance in your career that you speak of. When was it?"

"You know very well to what I allude. You know that I have loved you for all these years, since we were little more than children. You know that my highest dream of earthly happiness was to some day make a home for you, where I could have you with me always. There has not been an ambition in my brain that was not caused by my wish to excel and make you proud of me."

"The rest of the world can hang—now are my world, the all in all for me. And now, after all these years, all that counts for naught. There comes into your life a great big, beefy man—you know little about him except that he is very wealthy, and in the course of two months he undoes what I have done, or rather in that time accomplishes what I could not accomplish in six times as many years. Is not that evidence enough? What is to be deduced from that except what I have stated?"

"I ought to be very angry with you, John. You have accused me of a wretched thing, that I would sell my life, my love, my soul, merely to provide myself with creature comforts. I don't know why I don't make you leave me, and never permit you to speak to me again, except that I realize that your anger has carried you off your feet. I realize what you say, that such a state of things is an awful blow to a man. But I do not grant that any such state exists—that is—I mean—"

"You mean what, that you are not going to marry him?" There was light and life and hope in the questioner's eyes now.

"Yes, I mean that; and that I have not intended to do so. And now let me do a little preaching to you—you have had your say, and you have said things you ought not to have said."

"It is a mistaken notion men have, that a woman wants to receive all and give nothing. True love is self-effacement, and bearing the burdens of those we do love, and nothing gives a woman so much pleasure as to suffer for the man she really cares for."

"Do you really mean that?" There was wonderment upon the face of the questioner.

"Yes. And there would be more women who would be glad to accept even the little in the way of wealth their sweethearts possess, if they were given the chance. Instead of going bravely to her and saying 'I have little or nothing, but I love you. I can provide enough to keep us from starving, and enough to furnish us with clothes. More than that, I do not care for, with you at my side. Will you accept that?' The men stand off and snivel about women wanting wealth. It makes me weary. It's weakness."

There was a long pause. The sun had sunk below the horizon, and the west was gorgeous with the opaline tints of the dying day. The couple stood a moment looking at the sunset. Perhaps it was the glory of the ruddy rays upon her face, or the reflection from the golden gates of the west that shone in her eyes. He paused, for a moment, irresolute, and then taking her hand, looked her full in the eyes. She looked down and her face flushed.

"Helen," he said, very gently, "I have almost nothing in the way of goods or wealth, but I have a love for you that the wealth of Midas could not buy. Will you accept what I have?"

She looked up and smiled softly.

"Why didn't you say that a year or so ago? Yes, I will!"—Short Stories.

A HARD-WON VICTORY

The judge was leaving for the brooks of northern New York, and over the salad that he and three other good fellows were eating down at Tom's, the night of the first real spring day of the year, he told this story of his last year's fishing:

"When fishing weather came last April I simply ached to get away to the woods and the brooks. The first night of real fishing weather, and it was just such a night as this, I got out my tackle, and before the lazy fire in my library went through it all, just as I do every year. Every old bedraggled fly, each yard of frayed line, the reels and the springy rods brought back memories of splendid days on the brooks, and I planned an early visit to the singing Squawkill. But business went wrong, and I had a grind of it. It was not until the last of August that I could go after the trout, and the season is pretty late then, you know. I had missed spring fishing before in 12 years."

"I went up to my country cousin's farm, beyond the Adirondacks. That's where the Squawkill is, you know. Jim met me at the station, and as we drove out to the farm he told me of the fish that had been creel during the season. 'Now there's four half-pounders and an old fellow that will go near two pounds lying in the pool beneath Simpson's road bridge. I have tried, and Joe Reed and two city fellows have tried, to hook them, but we could not get even a rise. I reckon I've spent more than three whole days after that big fellow, and I've given him up. See what you can do; it's about your only chance around here.'"

"When we reached the farm I tramped across the meadow in front of the house to the bridge over Simpson's road. I was in a hurry to catch a glimpse of those trout. I crept up to the bridge, and lying flat in the dust peered over the edge and searched around in the pool for the fish. It was twilight, but I could see down in the water for some distance. I caught sight of two, and they were half-pounders. Then I found the big fellow. He was lying close to the stone pier. Two pounds easily, I judged, as I watched him with greedy eyes."

"Well, I tried every fly in my book the next morning. I took every precaution in casting, not a sound did I make, no shadow of mine or the rod fell on the pool. But not a rise did I get from any of the trout that lay under the bridge. Again that evening I tried. Grasshoppers and crickets, lively fellows, too, didn't prove attractive. I fished through the twilight. I played white millers, a Jenny Lind, and a glittering minnow skillfully over the pool. I even tried a firefly. I used every trick I had learned in my 12 years of fishing. The trout did not rise to a single cast. It was so the next day and the next. On the fourth day I did nothing but lie for several hours at the edge of the bridge and watch the fish down in the pool slowly fanning the gravel with their red fins. That's all they did during about six hours of silent watching. The next day I began to wonder if they would take a worm. I tried the lure, both fishing worms and fat white grubs. No rise. Late that afternoon when I went to the bridge again I heard the splash of a rising fish. I pecked through a crack quickly and saw the old two-pounder settling back into his lair with a widening circle of ripples above him. What did he rise to? I wondered. I looked about for evening insects. Not a bug was stirring except innumerable grasshoppers jumping about in the last mellow rays of the setting sun. I quickly caught a handful. And as I caught them I noticed that several of them were of different color and sizes. Perhaps that difference, I thought, might solve the problem of the trout's throat. I dropped a big, fat brown hopper down through a crack in the bridge floor. It fell just over the trout's lair and floated on down stream undisturbed."

"The last hopper in my closed fist was small, brown, mottled with black, and had little wings with red streaks in them. I dropped him down reluctantly. My eyes fairly bulged as I saw the great trout leap after it and spring entirely clear of the water. By the time he flopped back to his hiding place I was chasing wildly across the meadow to get my rod. I found Jim at the house, and, grabbing rod and reel and net, yelled for him to be in at the death. He came, and we hurried back to the bridge. Both of us then began a grasshopper chase that would have put an entomologist to shame. After catching about a dozen of every kind but the one wanted, Jim got hold of the mate to the one swallowed so eagerly a few minutes before. I strung the finest leader I had and my smallest Aberdeen. I put on the hopper with great care. Then I gave Jim instructions, and we crept up to the bridge. I stood back two paces from the edge of the pool. Jim took the baited hook in his hand and crawled onto the bridge. I was going to take no chance with a dangerous warning cast. Stealthily the squirming bait was dropped over the up-stream edge of the bridge. I gave line, and the lure floated down with the gentle swirl of the current. A tense moment of expectancy, and then came a vicious strike. A turn of the wrist, and I had the hook fast in him. I shouted, and so did Jim."

"At the first prick of the steel away he went, down to the pool, down into the riffles, and racing with half the line out before I could put the drag on. I stepped up to the pool to be ready for the fight. As the big trout felt the strain he turned and came back more furiously than he had gone down. Frantically I reeled in, trying to take up the slack that his swiftness had won for him. Clear up the pool he rushed, among the rocks at its head. There he stopped, and I had the line taut once more. He sulked and hung on the line as a dead weight. All the strain that the tackle would stand I put on him. For a moment, for ten, he stood it, and then down he came. Now to this strain, now to that, he rushed, shaking himself fiercely. The silken line sang with the strain, the silver leader hissed through the water; the four-ounce rod was a circle always. Twice the big trout, striving for freedom, leaped in splendid circles above the water. What a fish he was!

"He rushed for the hole beneath the pier, and it took my supremest skill and the uttermost strain on the line to stop him. He fought around the pool madly. The water was streaked in white with his rushes. Jim shouted and I trembled. Then his fierceness gave way to the sulks and he dropped down to the lowest depths. I kept the strain steadily on him for what seemed five minutes. Suddenly, almost unexpectedly, he burst out in the last tremendous effort to tear the steel from his mouth. I tell you boys, that was the hardest fight I ever hope to hook. How he did rip and tear about that pool! Twice he got slack on me and came near breaking loose with a swift rush. He seemed to be winning his fight. But of a sudden his strength went. And I drew him, flopping weakly, to the edge of the pool among the long grasses. He—"

"Stop right there, judge," said the banker. "Don't spoil that splendid battle by telling us how much he weighed. He was a game fighter. Don't let's measure him at all. Let's drink to him instead."

And they drank.—Kansas City Star.

MR. STACK'S STORY.

BY MAX ADELER.

Some time ago a young man named Stack sent a serial story to the Morning Argus in our village, and after waiting awhile, and hearing nothing about it, he concluded to call upon the editor, Col. Bangs, in order to ascertain why that narrative had not attracted attention. When Stack mentioned his errand, the colonel reached for the manuscript, and, looking very solemn, he said:

"Mr. Stack, I don't think I can accept this story. In some respects it is really wonderful; but I am afraid that if I published it, it would attract almost too much attention. People would get too wild over it. We have to be careful. For instance, here in the first chapter you mention the death of Mrs. McGinnis, the hero's mother. She dies; you inter Mrs. McGinnis in the cemetery; you give an affecting scene at the funeral; you run up a monument over her, and plant honeysuckles upon her grave. You create in the reader's mind a strong impression that Mrs. McGinnis is thoroughly dead. And yet, over here in the twenty-second chapter you make a man named Thompson fall in love with her, and she is married to him, and she goes skipping around through the rest of the story, as lively as a grasshopper, and you all the time alluding to Thompson as her second husband. You see, that kind of thing won't do. It excites remarks. Readers complain about it."

"Thunder! you don't say I did that? Well, now, do you know I was thinking all the time that it was Mr. McGinnis that I buried in the first chapter! I must have got them mixed up somehow."

"And then," continued the colonel, "when you introduce the hero, you mention that he has but one arm, having lost the other in battle. But in chapter 12 you run him through a sawmill by an accident, and you mention that he loses an arm there, too. And yet in the nineteenth chapter you say: 'Adolph rushed up to Mary, threw his arms about her, and clasped her to his bosom.' And then you go on to relate how he lay down at the piano, in the soft moonlight, and played one of Beethoven's sonatas 'with sweet, poetic fervor.' Now, the thing, you see, don't hang. Adolph couldn't possibly throw his arms around Mary, if one was buried in the field of battle and the other was minced up in a sawmill; and he couldn't clasp her to his bosom unless he threw a lasso with his teeth, and hauled her in by swallowing the slack of the rope. As for the piano, well, you know as well as I do that an armless man can't play a Beethoven sonata unless he knows how to perform on the instrument with his nose, and in that case you insult the popular intelligence when you talk about 'sweet poetic fervor.' I have my fingers on the public pulse, and I know they won't stand it."

"Well, well!" said Stack, "I don't know how I ever came to—"

"Let me direct your attention to another incendiary matter," interrupted the colonel. "In the first love scene between Adolph and Mary—let me see, what's her name?—Mary—you say that, 'her liquid blue eyes rested softly upon him as he poured forth the story of his love, and its azure was dimmed by a flood of happy tears.' Well, sir, about 20 pages farther on, where the villain insults her, you observe that her black eye flashed lightning at him, and seemed to scorch him where he stood. Now, let me direct attention to the fact that if the girl's eyes were blue, then they couldn't be black; and if you mean to convey the impression that she had one blue eye and one black eye, and that she only looked softly at Adolph out of the off eye, while the near eye roamed around, not doing anything in particular, why, she is too phenomenal for a novel, and only suitable for a place in the museum by the side of the fat woman. And then you say that, although her eye was liquid, let it scorch the villain! People won't put up with that kind of thing. It makes 'em delirious and murderous."

"Too bad!" said Stack. "I forgot what I'd said about her eyes, when I wrote that scene with the villain."

"And here in the twentieth chapter, you say that Magruder was stabbed with a bowie knife in the hands of the Spaniard; and in the next chapter you give an account of the post-mortem examination, and make the doctors hunt for the bullet, and find it imbedded in his liver. Even patient readers can't remain calm under such circumstances. They lose control of themselves."

"It's unfortunate," said Stack. "Now, the way you manage the Browns in the story is also exasperating. First, you represent Mrs. Brown as taking her twins around to church to be christened. In the middle of the book you make Mrs. Brown lament that she never had any children, and you wind up the story by bringing Mrs. Brown with her grandson in her arms, just after having caused Mr. Brown to state to the clergyman that the only child he ever had died in his fourth year. Just think of the effect of such a thing on the public mind! Why, this story would fill all the insane asylums in the country."

"Those Browns don't seem to be very definite, somehow," said Stack, thoughtfully.

"Worst of all," said the colonel, "in chapter 31 you make the lovers resolve upon suicide, and you put them in a boat and drift them over Niagara falls. Twelve chapters farther on you suddenly introduce them, walking in the twilight in a leafy lane, and, although afterward she goes into a nunnery and takes the black veil, because he has been killed by pirates in the West Indies, in the next chapter to the last you have a scene where she goes to a surprise party at the Presbyterian minister's, and finds him there making arrangements for the wedding as if nothing had ever happened; and then, after you disclose the fact that she is a boy in disguise, and not a woman at all, you marry them to each other, and represent the boy-heroine as giving her blessing to her daughter. Oh, it's awful! It won't do. It really won't. You'd better go into some other kind of business, Mr. Stack."

Then Stack took his manuscript and went home to fix it up so as to make the story dovetail better. The Argus will not publish it.—N. Y. Weekly.

Expressions of Prince Henry.

When Prince Henry of Prussia visited the United States about a year ago persons were surprised to see how quickly he picked up American idioms. To those associated with him it was not uncommon to hear such phrases as "made him look like 30 cents," "out of sight," and "go away back and sit down," with other current slang of 12 months ago, come tripping from the royal lips. Therefore, no one here is surprised to learn that in speaking of a statement he deems particularly direct and appropriate Baron von Sternberg frequently says: "It's bully—right off the bat."

Uncle Remsen Says:

OLD NAG SWINDLE.

"It isn't so hard to understand why gold bricks, sawdust and greengoods are still being sold in the good old-fashioned way, despite the great amount of advertising these swindles have had," said a well-known horseman; "but what I cannot understand is how men can still be done in horse deals, when newspapers, funny magazines, and even fiction for the last 20 years have been devoted to showing up the methods by which the gullible are roped in by swindling horse dealers."

"A friend of mine was 'done' in a horse deal the other day by a trick which was very popular 25 years ago, but which I haven't heard of as being tried in this city for 15 years at least. That it is being worked, and probably with a great deal of success, is indicated by the fact that shortly after my friend was caught another dealer tried the same trick on him."

"The present generation probably hasn't heard of this old trick, so I'll just tell the experience of my friend. He wanted a nice road horse and was willing to pay as much as $125 for the right animal. He hadn't owned many horses, but he is still a fair judge of an animal when he sees one. I don't know how he fell in with the horse swindler whom he did deal with finally, but that doesn't matter. The fellow's stables are in — street, and he is supposed to be doing a reputable business."

"Now, Mr. Jones," he said to my friend, when Jones had stated his business, "I have the very thing that you want, but I can't sell it to you without first telling the owner all about you and what you intend to use the animal for."

"You see," he went on, "this horse is one of five that belong to a wealthy widow who is going abroad for several years. The animals are all sort of pets of hers and she would rather sell them to a man who would treat them well for half of what they are worth than let them get into bad hands."

"The horse was trotted out, and it was a very sleek-looking animal, apparently sound as a dollar. It was the very thing my friend wanted, and he offered his limit at once. The dealer was quite sure the deal could be made at $125, and said he would give the rich widow my friend's assurance that the animal would be used for a light road wagon only and would always have the best of care. He was to call the next day with the money and get the animal, providing, of course, the rich widow didn't interpose any objection."

"Well, as my friend was leaving the stable a nice-looking man came up to him, said he had seen him looking at a horse and asked him if he meant to buy the animal."

"Yes," said Jones, "he's cheap at $125, and I think I'll take him."

"Now, see here," said the stranger, "that ass of a stableman won't sell me that horse just because I'm a dealer. It belongs to some fool woman who thinks it will be abused. I offered him $150 for the horse, and he turned me down. I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll give you $150 for the horse after you've bought him. Will you close with me or not?"

"Well, my friend is something of a commercial person, and he hadn't entirely made up his mind about the horse anyway, he thought it was a good chance to pick up $25, and agreed to make the deal. He wanted some kind of a guarantee that the other would take the horse after he had bought him, and the stranger promptly handed over $25 agreeing to pay him $125 more after he had bought the horse."

"The next day Jones appeared at the stable, and near the corner he met the stranger, who showed him a large roll of bills and urged him to hurry and get the horse, as he was afraid the stableman would find out what he was up to. Jones hustled over to the stable, and learned to his delight that the rich widow had agreed to let him have the horse."

"Shall I send him?" asked the stableman, after the money had been paid over. But Jones was too anxious for him. He was thinking of the man at the corner waiting with $125, and he said he would lead him away himself."

"Well, when he got up to the corner the horse dealer wasn't in sight. He waited around for half an hour, then took the horse to the stable where he kept his road wagon, and returned to the corner. But the dealer never showed up. Never suspecting anything, Jones rather congratulated himself that he had got a horse for $100 instead of the price he had expected to pay. He went back to the stable, hitched up to his road wagon and started out for a ride. Before he had gone three city blocks the horse went lame in three legs and a veterinary who looked at it that night said it was a hopeless cripple."

"A light began to dawn on Jones. But he was game, and took his medicine. With the firm intention of licking the man who had sold him the horse, he went to the stable three times, but never was able to catch him. He was evidently expected."

"The trick is an old one. The idea of one of the swindlers in giving up real money to the victim is to clinch the sale. The victim never doubts the good intentions of the dealer who has given him so liberal a deposit and is sure to buy. In this case the horse was worthless, but at the outside the owner could not have got more than $10 for him. With Jones $25 the confederate gave up the swindlers invested $35 and took in $125, a clear profit of $90. And they had put my friend in an extremely embarrassing position so far as any prosecution was concerned, for he would have to show himself up as a double dealer."

"Well, Jones never got square on the team that did him up, but he did get even with another team just like them. A month later, when he supposed he was dealing with a reputable man, he ran afoul of the same swindle. He didn't say a word until the second man approached him with a proposition to buy the horse and then sell it to him. Jones punched the man in the jaw, and kicked him a few times, and then did considerable street cleaning with the fellow."—N. Y. Sun.

Eating for Rag Dolls.

A very small girl in a Harlem apartment was observed by a friend of the family eating a certain cereal preparation. She seemed to eat, as the English are said to take their pleasures, sadly.

"Don't you like that, my dear?" inquired the friend.

"Not pertic'larly," replied the little maid.

"Why do you eat it, then?" persisted the inquirer.

"The daughter of the house paused with spoon on edge of bowl."

"It's got to be eaten," she answered, gravely. "The grocery man gives mamma a rag doll for every two packages she buys, and it's got to be eaten every morning."

And she continued to eat cereal.—N. Y. Times.

DIVORCE IN ROYAL FAMILIES.

The House of Hesse Has a Record That Was Abhorred by Queen Victoria.

Queen Victoria disapproved very strongly of morganatic marriages, almost as much as she did of divorce, and she dealt very peremptorily with her son-in-law, the husband of her favorite daughter, Alice of Hesse, who took unto himself a morganatic wife shortly after the death of the grand duchess.

This lady was the Gräfin Hutten-Szapaska, with whom Duke Louis lived only one week, so vehemently did his mother-in-law let him hear her mind on the subject, says London Sketch.

The Hesse family, indeed, are somewhat addicted to both divorce and morganatic marriages.

Wilhelm of Hesse was divorced from Princess Elizabeth of Schaumburg-Lippe; and his sister, Princess Maria Augusta, divorced her cousin-husband, Prince von Hesse-Philippsthal, very shortly after her marriage to him.

A generation ago Prince Alexis von Hesse, uncle of Ernst Louis, was divorced by his wife for cruelty, as he used to drag her about in the corridors of his palace, Mon-Bijou, in Berlin, by the hair.

While out of the recent ancestors of the family, Wilhelm Ernest Frederick of Hesse was actually married four times and divorced twice!

WORLD'S PETROLEUM SUPPLY.

Scientist Declares That Deposits of the Globe Are of Volcanic Origin.

E. Coste, the president of the Canadian Mining institute, recently read an interesting paper before that body, says the New York Commercial Advertiser, setting forth his reasons for believing that the petroleum deposits of the world are of volcanic origin. He points out a number of facts which render the theory at present generally held by geologists—that it has arisen directly from the decomposition of organic remains, animal and vegetable—untenable.

He calls attention to the fact that no such process is at present under way; that all organic decomposition of animal matter is so rapid and complete that there is no opportunity for the entombment of anything but bones in sedimentary rocks; that as the oil deposits of the lower silurian limestone of Ohio and other fields are below the carboniferous beds and as it is generally admitted by geologists that previous to the latter age there was very little vegetable life on the earth, these enormous deposits could not have arisen from organic remains, because there were few organisms at that time, and, finally, that if petroleum was due to the destructive distillation of coal, there would now be no coal beds, all having long ago been transformed into petroleum and a cokelike residue.

A FEW FACTS!

Longfellow could take a worthless sheet of paper, write a poem on it and make it worth $5,000.

J. P. Morgan can write a few words on a piece of paper and make it worth $1,000,000.

A mechanic can take a pound of steel and work it into watch springs, and make it worth $300.

We can write a check for $1,000,000 and it would not be worth a dime.

Your wife can buy a coat worth $10 but prefers one that cost $50.

There may be merchants who will tell you that they have better stock than we have.

We have a good stock of all kinds of Lumber that we are willing to sell at a reasonable profit.

That's Genius.

That's Capital.

That's Skill.

That's Rough.

That's Natural.

That's Gall.

That's Common Sense.
